Early Wheat

The demand of Western Canada is for a variety of wheat that will ripen early. We must be able to begin the harvest ten days to two weeks earlier than at present. Our agricultural colleges could make hundreds of millions of profit for Canada by the propagation of a variety of wheat that will mature quickly and develop early their yielding quality.

The Toronto world has an interesting editorial on the subject with reference to the recent wheat contest.

"The Red Fife" variety of wheat, which was introduced into Ontario more than half a century ago, says the World, "has been during that long interval well known to millers here and in Britain as the best wheat, ever produced for the production of strong bakers flour. It was taken to Manitoba by the early settlers forty years ago, and the result was the establishment of Manitoba as one of the highest grade of milling wheat known on either side of the Atlantic Ocean."

"No attempt would probably have been made to set up a rival to the grain as the general crop of the West had it not been for the slowness of its development, which left it peculiarly subject to damage by early frost before it is far enough advanced to escape danger. Growing wheat on a large scale did not begin till 1888, when annual losses from frost soon caused the officials of the Dominion Experimental farms to endeavor by hybridization to produce a kind of wheat that would mature earlier than the Red Fife, while retaining the peculiar qualities that make it so valuable for milling purposes."

To all appearances the search had been fairly successful. A short time ago a thousand dollar prize was won at a Land Exhibition in New York for the best hundred pounds of wheat, by Mr. Seager Wheeler of Boston, and the wheat that captured it was not "Red Fife" but a new variety known as "Marquis". Various kinds of wheat produced from Red Fife by hybridization had been tried for years, but while some of them had matured earlier than it none of them had ever equalled it in the remarkable baking strength. Three new varieties known as "Marquis", "Charles", and "Pride of the Marquis" were produced by crossing some of them with a wheat from the "old" Canada Red which is native of the extreme northern part of India. In the first year in which extensive tests could be made it was shown that "Marquis" wheat grown at Brandon was equal both in color and baking strength to Red Fife grown on the same farm, and superior to Red Fife grown at Indian Head. It is very much earlier than the Red Fife which it resembles in color and in fact the "Marquis" wheat maintains its present reputation its introduction will mean much to the West. There is good ground to hope for the fact that the fact that it is not regarded as one of the localities most suitable for wheat production that the wheat which won the prize in New York was produced in an exceptionally unfavorable season and that it was grown in the ordinary course of farm work. Any other farmer should be able to produce grain equally good if he adopts methods as scientific as Mr. Wheeler's and exercises as much care and intelligence as he uses. The ultimate outcome of experimentation on a large scale for a term of years will be watched by many people who are not themselves in a position to test the value of the new wheat."

Y.P.A. Re-Formed

A meeting was held in the L.O.O.P. hall on Monday evening last, for the purpose of reforming the Young People's Association of Bow Island. There was a good attendance and considerable interest was manifested in the proceedings.

The election of officers resulted as follows: Honorary Presidents, Rev. M. L. Wright and H. M. Henderson; President, W. Kenneth Bateman; vice-president, Miss Mrs. Gurnea; Secretary, Ernest R. Kennedy; assistant secretary, Miss Edna E. West; program committee, Miss Edna E. West, Miss Mrs. Gurnea and Lewis Hulbert.

The next meeting will be held in the L.O.O.P. hall on Monday, December 11, when the subject for debate will be "Eastern or Western Canada". Which presents the best opportunities for the young man. The affirmative will be taken by F. J. Swindale and W. Schenck, and the negative by W. E. Bateman and G. H. Yeale.

Supper and Concert

A very pleasant evening indeed was spent by those who attended the Thanksgiving supper held in the L.O.O.P. hall on Thursday evening of this week. The affair was arranged by the ladies of the Methodist Church and the arranging of the supper and concert was such as to justify via for them general commendation.

The attendance was a large one and numbered nearly two hundred persons. The proceeds as announced during the course of the evening netted about $80.00.

The program was as follows: Instrumental duet, Miss Fuller and Whistler song, "My air folk"; Miss Pollitt; recitation, "Snowbound"; Mrs. P. Ross; duet, "One sweetly solemn thought"; Mrs. M. L. Wright and D.A. McKinnis; recitation, "How a boat"; Mr. Alex. Waddell; song, "Sing me to sleep"; Miss Colp, with violin obligato by Mr. Archie Hoaglin; song, "Forgotten"; Mrs. P. Ross; song, "Whistle, and I'll come to you me lord"; Miss Maggie Waddell; solo, "Sweet Island of Dreams"; Mrs. M. L. Wright; recitation, "New Church Organ"; Mrs. Roberts; reading, "Jack the Fisherman"; Mr. Becker; song, "Longest Land"; Miss Pearl Hulbert.

The whole program was one that was most favorably commented upon and it is to be hoped that many of those taking part for the first time will consent to come forward again at some future date.

The evening closed with the singing of the United States and British national anthems.

Hockey Club

A number of hockey players met in Colp's hardware store on Monday last to consider the formation of a club and the creation of a hockey and skating rink in Bow Island.

The proposition met with instant success, and a subscription list started was liberally subscribed to.

The following officers were elected: Hon. President, Geo. F. Ridgeway; President, E. E. Colp; Vice-President, H. L. Jamieson; Secy.-Treas., R. S. Beattie.

It was decided to erect a fence four feet in height by 64 x 120, and as soon as cold weather really sets in the committee trusts to have a good sheet of ice.

The rink has been erected west end of town upon lots next the gas company's buildings.

Gas Well at Taber

A proposition for the continuance of boring operations at the municipal gas well has been submitted by the Sullivan Machinery Co. of Chicago, which if taken up by the Council should ensure the completion of the gas well to the required depth of 2000 feet within a very short period.

It is altogether likely that the Council will award a contract to the company in a week or two. The company, which is a well known one, sent their representative, Mr. Hoy, to Taber last week, and he had several interviews with the members of the Council to carry on the work. He is prepared to start work at once if given the contract, and states that his company can complete the 2000 feet in less than three months. The Sullivan Company will contract to balance of the 2000 feet, as they will contract to have as much per thousand feet. If the town does not care to give them a contract they will be willing to rent a machine to the town, or to sell them one.

The gas well is down now to a depth of 1000 feet. There is sufficient money still left from the amount voted by the taxpayers to complete the well. The Sullivan Company will give no guarantee whatever, but state that if given the contract they will be prepared to carry on the work with all possible speed.—Taber Times.

No home in Western Canada can set its value in dollars and cents for a year's subscription to The Family and Weekly Star. That paper has been a blessing in thousands of Western homes. Its agricultural columns are as good as a course in college. Its world's news page covers everything in the news line and its magazine section provides ample reading for the whole family. Any person seeing the beautiful picture "Home Again" is a shop window would send by five dollars for it, yet it can be had absolutely free by sending a dollar for a year's subscription to the paper. Such a paper for a year will send a beautiful picture all for the price of a bushel of wheat is certainly a good investment.

HAIR MADE AT HOME

THIS summer the hat that is not a straw costume just as important. A piece in the millinery made of the straw snaps. The fact that fashion looks with a friendly eye on the fabric hat gives opportunity to all new-deween to make those attractive shades at home. Suppose that you are not a needlewoman. Well, it is never too late to begin a profitable task. Try one of these models just to prove that you were wrong when you said that you never could sew.

If you buy or make the wire frame you must provide yourself with millinery's term for a coarse quality of net. Cover the frame with this and use either white or black for the foundation, according to the color of your outer shade. It is easy to separate crown from brim and cover each separately. If you do not wish to do this, you will apply the net as shown in the picture. Whip it over the edge of the brim; gather the lower edge and sew firmly on the wire frame. Cover the crown by stretching the scrim over it, pleating it at the sides and binding it around the crown with strong thread.

With this preliminary work for your starting point let us consider the selection before us.

The liffetta hat is quite simple. First, the outer edge is covered with a blue band of silk that is folded for two inches on the upper and under surfaces. Pleat-ings of silk are made at regular intervals of one inch and basted in place. The remaining part of the brim is covered with a fitted drapery piece, secured at the back. The cording edges lie and are stitched down over the pleated edge. The under surface is faced in the same way. When making the crown a large circle of silk is laid in parallel folds and placed over the top. Any fullness is pinned in at the sides, and a blue band is added to conceal the joinings.

To this liffetta hat there is added a Dresden ribbon twisted band that ends in a rosette at one side. This is a double row of pleated ribbon surrounding four loops. With a silk dress or suit this type is particularly appropriate and suggests an idea for using the pieces that are left from one dress.

A black net hat is always in style. You will see that a band of shirred net about two inches in width is used. The net is very soft and is easily applied over the frame. The remaining portions of the brim and crown are covered with plain net. The special charm of this net hat lies in the trimming of silk cording applied at the edge and in concentric circles on the crown. A large rosette of pleated net is placed at one side. The under surface is one piece of black net, drawn in in folds to the edge of the crown. This is a very easy type to be copied in white or ecru net and trimmed with a rosette or with a large silk rose.

White lace is used on the rose-trimmed hat in another model. A blue portion of the brim to show through. Around the edge is a fringe of pink straw, bought by the yard. It is joined at the back. A bow of pink ribbon is placed at the side. Another favorite trimming for this kind of hat is a large butterfly of eyelid-wired and perched on the side of the crown.

The under surface of this hat is plain linen. Fabric hats are light weight and have the commendable feature of being excellent ways to use small pieces of organdie, dainty lace, silk and linen. They are so easily constructed that the left-over pieces should not be allowed to suffer from disuse. The fabric hat, besides being one of the summer innovations, gives a delightful sense of completeness to a costume.

For practical hands these suggestions should open the way to successful work in millinery. The wire frame, covered, a little remnant of summer material, a spool of strong thread and a milliner's needle, plus an intelligent ability to follow directions, will result in a satisfaction that economy and beauty never fail to give.

Turkish Women

SINCE the revolution in Turkey the women of the progressive classes, which the harem have been gradually freeing themselves from the shackles in which they have lived so long. The black sarakasi, as the veil was called, is now to be seen no more. Veils are so thin as to show the color of the hair plainly, and many Turkish women go about with faces uncovered. The fez, or upper garment, has also undergone modifications. It has ceased to be wide and loose and shows the lines of the figure, often being confined to a waist by a belt.

Women are seen now on the streets with men who are not their husbands or brothers. They ride in carriages and go boating with them, in social gatherings at which Europeans are present women of the highest class are seen, and they mingle freely with foreign women and with men. Public schools are being opened, and the handsome have established at Constantinople a school of domestic science taught by Europeans. The new initiative of Turkish women is very much in their favor and will doubtless do great things for them.

Once in Turkey the germ of progressiveness has taken root, and the Ottoman empire will not be far behind her brother countries of the west.

A Golden Rule

FOLLOW the golden rule to avoid estrangement. Doctor Johnson said: "I am sure she was well-dressed, for I cannot remember what she had on." suggests a clue to the secret of being faultlessly attired. Neatness in dress and refinement in character often go together, as well as a love of the beautiful in nature and in art.

Indifference and consequent indifference in dress offend good nature and righteousness or indulgence. It is not a commendable thing among the rich, the love of dress promises some degree of exertion and energy in the line of duty. Every woman should study to make the best of herself with the means at her command. Among the rich, the love of dress promises some degree of exertion and energy in the line of duty. Every woman should study to make the best of herself with the means at her command.

An attention to dress is useful as retaining, even in the minds of sensible men, that pride in a wife's appearance which is the surest way to keep her from that due influence which, in the present state of society, cannot be attained without it.

A Wrong Choice

THERE is no art, nor opinion of art, possible, but the wrong deed or action has been done, and you are stay in your vine treacher forever. You are stay in your vine treacher forever. You are stay in your vine treacher forever. You are stay in your vine treacher forever.

"HOW delightfully cool! That is the first thought that strikes you as you enter the glimmer-furnished bungalow. The walls of the living room are painted a cool green or blue or lavender or gray. The floor is painted in darker shade of the same color, or if the walls are only whitewashed, the floor is in a clay yellow that sounds nice, but is really very attractive. At the windows are curtains of checked glingham, again reflecting the color of the walls and floor. A glingham screen stands guard over a glingham-clad table. Upholstered chairs, chair cushions, sofa pillows, even the wastebasket and the lampshade are of the same inexpensive material. Go into the bedroom, and, dressing tables, chairs, shirtwaist boxes—all the same. There is a glingham cover on the dining-room table, and the sidewalk shows its clean plates from the glingham baggages. And out on the porch the hammock cushions, the lounging chairs—everything—are of the same color, of course; that would grow monotonous. The blue room may be separated from the green room, for instance, by a double curtain, one side in each of the two shades. The checks, too, may be of different sizes; but, on the whole, checked glingham is better for several reasons than plain. It relieves the eye more; it is cooler; it is usually cheaper, and it can be had in a greater variety of colors.

A word now as to the making of some of these articles. The curtains are quite easy. They are simply deeply hemmed and then gathered over the curtain pole, the two long sides being edged with coarse embroidery or fancy white trim. Be very careful about the fitting of your doors and windows; take your measurements with a folding rule or a tape measure, and give them twice to make sure that they are accurate.

When it comes to covering a screen with the glingham the method is even easier. Buy a cheap screen—any hideous variety will do, so long as the frame is strong. Then stretch the glingham taut and fasten with gilt upholstery tacks to both sides of the screen, either covering it entirely or leaving the wooden frame (which in this case should previously have been painted to match the glingham and varnished) exposed. The latter plan is really prettier, as the wood gives an attractive contrast to the glingham.

The sofa pillows, of course, need no directions, since they are like cushions for the same purpose of any material; but a few words must be said as to the padded chair cushion. A flat cushion may be used as a foundation, or the glingham may simply be stuffed with cotton or straw, with a square bolstering. Each side is covered separately, a carpet needle being used to produce the regularly spaced knots. Each knot is made by simply turning the heavy white thread two or three times upon itself and then running the needle through it. When the knots are finished the glingham should be stretched almost taut over the foundation. The edges are then stitched down and a narrow hemmed band is sewed on to hide the joining. There are four of these bands of course, one in square cushion, and they are doubled and stitched down at the corners.

The sidewalk box looks as if it were quite a task, but really it is a simple matter of gluing tacks. The important thing is to cut your material straight and stretch it lightly, so there are no wrinkles. The top edge of the box proper and the lower edge of the glingham should be bound with furniture tape, held down by smaller tacks. The bottom edge, of course, is secured with all. The box should be lined with plain glingham of the same shade as the checked. Do not, lastly, forget the casters or rubber balls to protect the floor.

The same principle is observed in the covering of the dressing table. To tell the truth, the particular table shown here was originally a small one of the kitchen variety; glingham is stretched and tacked down over the top, and is gathered very fully at the sides, being tacked on at the middle of the gathered hem. That is really all there is to it.

The wastebasket is of glingham-covered cardboard, each piece made separately and then laced together, with cord just as in the plain cardboard basket. The glingham is gathered over a wire frame, each as may be bought for a quarter of a year place where the wires join, the thread is run over and over until it holds firmly.

Did it cost a great deal to build your bungalow? Then here is a way to furnish it cheaply, and yet daintily and coolly.

Prehistoric Monsters

LUCKY, indeed, is the museum that possesses as much as part of a skeleton of one of the enormous reptiles that roamed the world before the flood. But now comes a brilliant explorer who declares that these antediluvian monsters still live, and are found in the Hindustan swamps, along the southern border of the desert of Sahara, in Africa. There exist there, he says in his appeal for funds for the explorations, the dipodomys, the protodactyl and the dinosaur. Native hunters report the existence of an elephant bone like a cat, or rather, crocodile, running in every way to the habits of a lion and other which cannot, according to accounts, be anything more or less than dragons.

Who knows? Perhaps some day a scientist will do more than merely catch sight of a sea serpent.

Colors to Wear

IN SPIRIT of advice to the contrary, blondes should avoid the lighter shades of blue, which make their complexion seem sallow. The darker shades, however, have the complexion in high relief and are vastly becoming.

True brunettes, who make the skin yellow than ever, but blond brunettes can do so. Blondes may wear green, but not leucis. Pale brunettes may wear any shades of red and crimson, which, however, looks well on the blonde. Yellow is the color for the blonde, especially for evening wear. It cleans the complexion and gives off the dark eye and hair wonderfully.

They rode up to Allen Hacienda shortly after nine. However had arrived. They could hear the murmur of the wedding guests in the kitchen. And laughter was punctuated by the popping of corks, and McKee, who rode in advance of Bud, distinguished the voice of the sheriff in exhortation to the general rally rallied concentrated upon him.

The half breed grinned wolfishly. It was evident that the bloodhound of the law had tracked the murderer just as the real criminal had expected and desired.

Polly ran out on the piazza. She saw the man whom she regarded as her lover's evil genius, and she greeted her indignantly. "Howdy, Miss Polly," she replied sharply.

"You ain't got to invite to this wed-

"I come with my friend Bud," he explained, with an air of defiance. "I didn't see you, Bud," answered Polly, slightly mollified, as she crossed the doorway to show him the bridegroom. Bud, however, had turned her back, and she ignored him, shrugged his shoulders and started for the house.

"Bud, he's come out down because he isn't his wedding," was McKee's parting shot at the young couple. "I've got to go in an' join the boys. Excuse me."

"With pleasure," coldly replied the girl.

The half breed ignored the sarcasm, and, answering innocently, "Much obliged," he entered the house.

Polly turned on Bud, displaying her resentment. "You ain't been waiting to the devil when you're together."

"What did you bring him along for?" she demanded.

"He's his last chance to see any fun around here. He's leaving for Texas," explained Bud.

"For how long?"

"For ever good, you mean. There's too many of his kind come into this country. Did you know about Ole McNeill?"

Bud did not wait for her to explain, but nervously answered, "He's a bad one. He's in Phoenix when we were working through. We've been at the Law K."

"Wasn't it dreadful?" rattled on Polly. "Allen's been in the boys' gold to turn out with him after the wedding to see if they can catch the other who did the deed."

Bud paled as he heard the news. To reveal his distress he moved toward the door, and then he turned back to the girl to whom he feared he would betray himself. "I'll join 'em," he hastily answered.

Polly, however, could see no reason for his evident haste to leave. She felt hurt, but thought his action was due to her scolding him with Bud and McKee.

"You ain't ever met him now I look?" she inquired, looking at him with a smile.

"You look like," complimented Bud perfunctorily.

"When a fellow ain't a fellow in a look, seems like a fellow in a look to me," she said, smiling at his remark.

Bud smiled in spite of his fears. Catching the girl in his arms, he kissed her and said, "I'm waiting for the chance."

Polly disengaged herself from his embrace and sighed contentedly. "That's something like it. What's the use of being engaged to a fellow if you can't have all the trimmings that goes with it. You look as if you want to be happy."

Bud pulled himself together with an effort. He realized that if he did not stop now, he would be in a bad way. He was not a man to wait for the wedding he might be suspected of connection with the murder.

He shrugged up an explanation of his moodiness.

"Well, what can I have to be happy? Haven't I got my job?"

"Yes, but that's because you are not married. If you were married, you'd be a man. But everything will come out all right, Jack says."

"Hasn't that ever done it? Bud did tell you how he got his place here. He promised me to be happy."

"That wasn't what you give him, Bud. He ain't the man to give him. Why?"

"Chief? Of course he is, and a better hearted one than the boys. But he's not going to suit my brother Dick's girl. He's not a good man. But Dick is dead," expostulated Polly.

"Dick isn't dead. I know it—that is," he stammered. "I feel it in my bones he isn't dead. And Jack feels it too. That's why he's hurried up this wedding."

"You ain't my friend, Dick McKee, said Dick just before he died. He told me."

"But not after it. And Buck now thinks the rumors may have come up in time to save him."

"Because to me of that's so he has had time enough since then to write," objected Polly, who was nevertheless impressed by Bud's valiance.

"How do you know that he has not written?"

"You could only guess. These accusations were coming too fast for her to answer."

"You can't tell what a man might do in a case like that. Perhaps Dick's way in the mountains, away from the railroad, prospecting down in the Colorado range, where he has been trying to improve his lot. He's a good man, but for his not writing to Lolo, but Lolo doesn't seem to mind. A year will be enough to send a year man's heart."

"Now, you—Legan Polly, who was growing angry under the charges laid on her, being teased longer by her two best friends by the overbearing Bud. Bud would not let her finish, but cried: 'Lolo never loved him. If she did she would not be acting as she is doing tonight.'"

Rushing to Echo's defense, Polly answered, "She may or may not have loved Dick Lolo, but I know that she loves Jack Payson now with all her heart, and even if the 'Paches did not get your brother he is as dead to her as if he had.'"
